

Danielle Johnson is an affordable housing advocate, conversation catalyst, inclusion and diversity educator, community mobilizer, and super volunteer. Danielle has the pleasure of serving as the Executive Director for Wichita Habitat for Humanity and is a majority owner of Inclusive Growth Strategies, an inclusion and diversity consulting business. Danielle is a Shocker through and through, holding a Bachelor of Arts in Psychology and a Master in Public Administration from Wichita State University. She has dedicated the last two decades of her life working with various communities. Danielle provides advocacy, training, resource sharing and facilitated dialogues that enrich the organizations and communities she's been blessed to work alongside. Danielle has served on a number of boards to currently include Community Operations Recovery Empowerment (CORE), Rise Up for Youth, and HealthCore Community Clinic.

The most important part of Danielle's life is her three children Khairi, Aria, Arin, and spouse Vice Mayor and Councilman for Wichita District 1 Brandon Johnson. They are a family dedicated to servant leadership. Danielle believes in working to create positive tangible changes and a more inclusive, equitable, and affordable housing environment in the greater Wichita community.